Introduction and Rondo capriccioso in A Minor, Op. 28

Camille Saint-Saëns

By the time Saint-Saëns met him, Pablo de Sarasate was already an established violin virtuoso, though he was only fifteen years old. Saint-Saëns wrote:

> It is a long time ago now since I first saw Pablo de Sarasate call at my house. Fresh and young as spring itself, the faint shadow of a mustache scarcely visible on his upper lip, he was already a famous virtuoso. As if it were the easiest thing in the world he had come quite simply to ask me to write a concerto for him. Flattered and charmed to the highest degree I promised I would, and I kept my word with the Concerto in A major.

The First Violin Concerto, written in 1859, was only the beginning of their long artistic relationship. In 1863 Saint-Saëns wrote the present Introduction and Rondo capriccioso for Sarasate, who for unknown reasons did not give the first performance until April 4, 1867; the composer waited until 1870 to publish the piece, but meanwhile Sarasate performed it throughout Europe and in the United States. In 1880 Saint-Saëns honored him again with the Third Violin Concerto.

These works were ideally suited to Sarasate’s style of playing—technically perfect, with an unusually sweet and pure tone and a wider vibrato than was common at the time—all of which he reportedly achieved without practicing scales or exercises. The Introduction and Rondo capriccioso is a brilliant showpiece and perhaps the most famous of Saint-Saëns's lighter compositions. Frequent performances were facilitated by Bizet, who made the violin and piano arrangement, and Debussy, who made a version for two pianos.

In Sarasate’s honor, Saint-Saëns gave the one-movement work a pronounced Spanish flavor. The rhapsodic violin passages of the Introduction are accompanied by pizzicato strings, suggesting a guitar. The Rondo theme with its “Spanish” syncopations alternates with contrasting episodes guaranteed to show off the violinist’s virtuosity. The work ends with a whirlwind coda that dazzles with its pyrotechnical display of scales and arpeggios.
Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat Major, LW H4
Franz Liszt

As a celebrated young piano virtuoso, Liszt made a few sketches for his First Piano Concerto in 1830. He did not begin work in earnest, however, until 1849 in Weimar, where he had accepted the position of Court Kapellmeister the previous year. Still not satisfied, he reworked the Concerto in 1853 and finally prepared it for a public performance on February 17, 1855. On this auspicious occasion Liszt himself was the soloist with none other than Berlioz as conductor. The Concerto met with great enthusiasm, although it must be said that Liszt was such a persuasive performer that the audience would have adored anything he played. He felt, however, that further revisions were necessary, which he undertook in 1856.

Critics have periodically taken the work to task for empty virtuosity, and the opinionated Viennese critic Eduard Hanslick lampooned it as a “triangle concerto,” simply because Liszt had written a triangle part when traditional concertos had none. Fashions and tastes change, however, and the compelling Concerto has triumphantly survived them all.

Liszt was extraordinarily preoccupied with both the idea of combining several movements in one and the related idea of cyclic form, in which the same musical material appears in more than one movement. In both regards he was profoundly influenced by the example of Schubert, whose celebrated Wanderer Fantasy for piano four hands Liszt knew well and had arranged for piano and orchestra in 1851. He was also well aware of the cyclic properties of Berlioz’s Symphonie fantastique, which he had transcribed for piano in 1834.

Liszt’s Concerto No. 1 consists of four sections played continuously. The sections resemble the forms of a Classic symphony and indeed Liszt referred to them as such in his correspondence. None is developed completely in the Classic style, however, and throughout Liszt ingeniously transforms and develops themes that have been heard before.

The bold opening theme sets the bravura tone of the work but also prepares the listener for a harmonic adventure, since it immediately changes keys. The phrase also serves as a motto that unifies the entire Concerto. Apparently Liszt and the conductor Hans von Bülow fit words to it—“Das versteht ihr alle nicht, haha!” (None of you understand this, haha!)—which may refer to the form, harmonies, or the challenging piano part. This section has hardly begun when the pianist plays a brilliant cadenza, only one of many such passages of virtuosic display.
The strings briefly present the lovely melody of the “slow movement” (
) before the piano alone plays a fuller version. The atmosphere of serenity undergoes an amazing transformation when Liszt reuses the theme in the final section. After the appearance of contrasting material, the return of the lyrical theme in the clarinet suggests a ternary shape. In Liszt’s condensed form, however, the “scherzo” begins instead, signaled by the triangle that so provoked Hanslick.

The “scherzo” is also truncated, in this case by a piano cadenza and a transition, both of which develop the motto theme from the opening. The main theme of the Quasi adagio returns in the guise of a spirited march to begin the finale. “The fourth movement of the Concerto,” the composer wrote to his cousin with pride, “is only an urgent recapitulation of the earlier material with quickened, livelier rhythm, and it contains no new motives. . . . This kind of binding together and rounding off a piece at its close is somewhat my own, but it is quite organic and justified from the standpoint of musical form.” Motives from the Quasi adagio reappear, the main scherzo motive is treated extensively, and finally the motto theme returns. With a torrent of pounding octaves the soloist concludes the Concerto in a blaze of glory.

Harold in Italy, Op. 16
Hector Berlioz

Following a triumphant performance of his Symphonie fantastique, Berlioz was enthusiastically accosted by violin virtuoso Niccolò Paganini, who begged him to write a work he could play on the wonderful Stradivarius viola he had recently acquired. Berlioz reports in his often unreliable Memoirs that this meeting occurred following the December 22, 1833, performance of the Symphonie, though biographer David Cairns suspects it actually took place after the successful December 9, 1832, performance. Berlioz tried to write a solo part that would please the virtuoso but said he was “on fire” to carry out an idea that treated the viola and orchestra as equal partners. Paganini saw the first movement and exclaimed, “That’s not it at all! I am silent too long in that; I must be playing the whole time.” With that, Paganini disappeared from the scene, leaving Berlioz free to work on the composition without worrying how to make the viola shine. Berlioz continued in his Memoirs:

I conceived the idea of writing a series of scenes for the orchestra, in which the viola should find itself involved, like a person more or less in action, always preserving his own individuality. By fitting the viola into my poetical memories of my peregrinations in the Abruzzi [section of the Apennines northwest of Rome], I wanted to make the instrument into a sort of melancholy dreamer, in the style of Byron’s Childe Harold. Hence the title of the symphony, Harold in Italy. As in the Symphonie fantastique, one principal theme (the first melody of the viola) is reproduced throughout the work, but with this difference, that the theme of the Symphonie fantastique—the idée fixe—intrudes itself obstinately, like a passionate, episodic idea, into scenes wholly foreign to it, disrupting them, whilst Harold’s strain is added to the other orchestral strains, with which it contrasts, both in movement and character, without hindering their development.

Berlioz had spent a year in Italy, 1831–32, having won the Prix de Rome. As with many other composers—Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Tchaikovsky, to name only a few—Italy had a profound effect on him. By borrowing Byron’s concept of the melancholy Romantic commentator rather than any specific text from the poem, Berlioz could comment musically on his own Italian memories. Though he provided no specific program for his Harold “symphony” other than the descriptive movement titles, he detailed his programmatic inspirations in his Memoirs: his wanderings in the Abruzzi, a distant procession of monks, an impromptu evening serenade, and an imagined—not actually seen—brigands’ orgy. Berlioz completed Harold in 1834; it was first performed on November 23 that year, conducted by Narcisse Girard with Chrétien Urhan, a Conservatoire classmate of Berlioz, playing the solo part Paganini had turned down. The performance was an enormous success, fulfilling Berlioz’s prediction that the Pilgrim’s March (second movement) would have to be encored. Problems with this encore and with the fourth performance of Harold made Berlioz resolve to conduct his own works in the future: mixed up cues had ruined the encore, and Girard had difficulties conducting the ending of the Serenade (third movement) at the fourth performance. As for Paganini, when he finally heard Harold in Italy in 1838 he was so moved that he made Berlioz a handsome monetary gift that subsequently enabled him to compose his next “symphony,” Romeo and Juliet.

Harold in Italy, like many of Berlioz’s major works, defies classification. It takes its four-movement structure from the symphony, its descriptive movement titles and a certain structural freedom from the tone poem, and its prominent, though nonvirtuosic solo viola part from the concerto or sinfonia concertante. From Berlioz’s own description of the viola in his orchestration treatise, one understands how well suited he found it to depicting his melancholy observer. “The sound of its low strings has a particular pungency, its high notes sparkle by their sadly impassioned accent and its sonority, deeply melancholic, differs from that of the other bowed instruments.”

Among the countless striking features of the work is the fugal orchestral opening, which anticipates the Harold theme as presented by the viola. Berlioz scholar D. Kern Holoman points out its curious “ahistoric purpose”—it is used to evoke wandering, whereas fugues traditionally symbolized erudition and formality. The recurring Harold theme, incidentally, and one other first-movement theme originated in Berlioz’s withdrawn Rob Roy overture. Berlioz’s interest in timbre and spatial effects are particularly evident in the slow movement, in which he succeeds in depicting the chanting pilgrims and tolling bells instrumentally, almost creating a great Doppler effect to represent the passing of the procession.

In the scherzo-like Serenade, Berlioz imitates the music of the pifferari he had heard in Italy—street musicians playing rustic shawms and bagpipes—with piccolo, oboe, and divided violas; the “singing” of the serenade begins with the English horn melody. A wonderful example of the rhythmic ingenuity that permeates the work occurs in the three-way reunion of themes in the final section of the Serenade. Here when the pifferari rhythmic pattern, the serenade melody, and the Harold theme come together, the violas play two measures to every one for the remainder of the orchestra—the precise spot that brought disaster to conductor Girard.

In the Orgy of the Brigands, Berlioz recalls all of the previous movements, in the self-referential manner of Beethoven’s Ninth Symphony, which he idolized. The solo viola has little to do in this movement after the reminiscences except for a fleeting bit of Harold’s evening hymn heard in the distance as he flees in terror. Highly organized, rhythmically vital orchestral “pandemonium” (Berlioz’s word) predominates.

ABOUT THE CONDUCTORS’ PROJECT

Maestro Leonard Slatkin, MSM Distinguished Visiting Artist in Conducting and Orchestral Studies and a member of the School’s Board of Trustees since 2009, chooses two conducting students each year to participate in the Conductors’ Project. Working with MSM Director of Orchestral Activities George Manahan and the students in the MSM Symphony Orchestra, Maestro Slatkin offers the selected conducting fellows intensive coaching and invaluable experience leading an orchestra. The Project consists of five days of rehearsals with the MSM Symphony Orchestra leading up to the annual final concert, which features the student conductors joining Maestro Slatkin in taking a turn on the podium. This year’s conductors are a Master’s candidate and a DMA candidate at Manhattan School of Music.
THE CENTENNIAL PROJECT

Manhattan School of Music’s Centennial Project is an ambitious program of improvements to the School’s architecturally distinguished campus. The centerpiece of the Project is the renovation of Neidorff-Karpati Hall, MSM’s principal performance space, which has been transformed into a state-of-the-art venue to showcase our talented students. Built in 1931 and designed by Shreve, Lamb & Harmon, the architects of the Empire State Building, the hall has been called “one of the Art Deco treats in the city” by the New York Times. The Project also includes a dramatic and welcoming new campus entrance on Claremont Avenue, new practice rooms, and an expansion of the main entryway and lobby.

ABOUT MANHATTAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Founded as a community music school by Janet Daniels Schenck in 1918, today MSM is recognized for its more than 960 superbly talented undergraduate and graduate students who come from more than 50 countries and nearly all 50 states; its innovative curricula and world-renowned artist-teacher faculty that includes musicians from the New York Philharmonic, the Met Orchestra, and the top ranks of the jazz and Broadway communities; and a distinguished community of accomplished, award-winning alumni working at the highest levels of the musical, educational, cultural, and professional worlds.

The School is dedicated to the personal, artistic, and intellectual development of aspiring musicians, from its Precollege students through those pursuing doctoral studies. Offering classical, jazz, and musical theatre training, MSM grants a range of undergraduate and graduate degrees. True to MSM’s origins as a music school for children, the Precollege program continues to offer superior music instruction to 475 young musicians between the ages of 5 and 18. The School also serves some 2,000 New York City schoolchildren through its Arts-in-Education Program, and another 2,000 students through its critically acclaimed Distance Learning Program.
